From the Louisville Journal. THE SPIRIT-BAND

BY MRS. R. S. MICHOLS. Yx are with me! Ye are with me! Even at the Morning's birth, When her robes of light are loosened

O'er the fair and freshened earth : Ye are with me-round about me, Winged spirits of the skies, Peopling air and space around me Though unseen by other eyes. As I guze upon your features. In each lineament I trace, Though you are but passing shadows, Likeness to some well-known face.

First thou comest, longest parted. Bound by every tie to earth: Slowly, sadly did we yield thee. Knowing well thine angel worth When the summer flowers were stricken By the automa reaper's breath. Knowing thee as ripe for harvest,

Carae the noiseless reaper, Death By the border lakes, whose beauty Cast around thy heart a spell, Where thy footsteps oft have lingered,

There thy corse is sleeping well. Ye are with me! Ye are with me! At the golden noontide hour, And the spirit-gleam around me,

Tells me of your hidden power. There's another form beside me, Slight and fairy-like its frame: Life was shert, no years it numbered, Earth scarce stamped it with a name! Yet I wept when the did'st leave us.

And my heart is beating wild, As I gaze upon thine image, And recall my brother's child!

Ye are with me! Ye are with me! At the twilight-hour of rest, When the sugget rears its banners O'or the portals of the west. Hush thy monnings, gentle spirit Soft thy shadow falls on mine And an angel voice is whispering "Lo! young mother, he is thine!"

Ay, thou it with them, loved and loving, Naught could stay the tyrant's hand; Onward! still his course is anward

What he are Spring's low breathings. What the melodies that ring Through our green and ancient forests? Thee, to me, not these can bring. Thou art called the Awakener: But, sweet Spring, thy power hath fled: I ask not thy birds nor flowers,

O'er our bright and cherished land

What to me are Spring's low breathings !

Wake for me thy hely dead! Ye are with me! Ye are with me When the mournful midnight waves Woo the moon's unsteady gleamings.
As they light the new-made graves

What! thou, too, art gazing on me, With the dark and carer eyes: Last to leave us—loved most fondly— Thee I view with and surprise. Wit in Choosing Texts.—A young preacher, in the time of James I, being appointed to hold forth kofore the vice-chancellor and heads of colleges of Oxford, chose his text, "What, cannot ye watch for one hour?" which carried a personal allusion, as the vice-chancellor happened to be one of those heavy-headed persons who cannot attend church without falling asleep. The preacher repeating his text in an emphatic manner, at the end of every division of his discourse, the unfortunate vice-chancellor as often awoke, and this happened so often that at last all present could very well see the joke. The vice-chancellor was so nettled at the disturbance he had met with and the talk it occasioned, that he complained to the Archbishep of Canterbury, who imme-diately sent for the young man to repreve him for what he had done. In the course of the conference which ensued between the Archbishop and the preacher, the latter gave so many proofs of his wit and good sense, that his grace procured him the honor of preaching before the King. Here also he had his joke; he gave his text in these words: James 1st and 6th, "Waver not," which of course every body present saw to be a stroke at the indecisive character of the monarch. Jumes, equally quick-sighted, exclaimed, "Tra is at me already;" but he was on the whole so well pleased with this clerical wag, as to make him one of his chaplains in onlinary. He afterwards went to Oxford, and preached a farewell sermon on the text, "Sleep on now, and take your

TEN PER CENT TO BE PAID OR SECURED UPON SUBSCRIPTION.

THE Charter of this Company is without exception one of the safest and most liberal ever granted by the Stote of New York, and as there is no probability that any new companies will be incorporated for some time to come, it is desoly valuable on that account, and the Commissioners are destrous of rapproxing it to the best advantage for the good of the public as well as that of individuals.

In soliciting the attention of Capitalists to their plans of subscription, they can recommend them with entire confidence as having been adopted after mature reflection, both in reference to convenience, practicability, profit and safety; and with a view to increase the confidence of the public, in the permanent safety of savestments in their capital, they bility, profit and safety; and with a view to increase the confidence of the public, in the permanent sufety of seventeents in their capital, they doesn't preper to remark, that no pains or necessary expense will be seared in securing honest mon to conduct its business in every department, men of integrity and experience, whose study and determination will be to premote and preserve the interest and property of the stock-holders, and not apply the confidence reposed in them to unjustifiable and recibless speculations, which in years past have caused the downfall and runn of so many banking institutions, and all confidence in the integrity even of innecent and well meaning near, who are leoked upon with distrust, however worthy or useful in reality may be the objects of motives they have to accombab.

upon with distrust, however, worthy or useful in reality may be the objects or motives they have to accomplish.

The plans of subscription differ from those usually adopted by joint stock companies, inasumen as the suptial will draw no interest—or in other vorsis, the interest which the company may acquire under the investments of their capital, will make no part of the dividends, but each stockholder will be paid twee in every year their respective propertions of interest money as well as profits derived from their insarance busines; cash subscribers, deriving all the interest received upon their payments exclusively.

Bank, City or State Stock subscribers and the dividends on their subscriptions exclusively, while those securing their payments by hands and mortgages are required to pay no interest, and are entitled to their equal proportion of natual profits derived from their insurance business in common with other subscribers in money and stocks.

That there sany he no misunderstanding by this subscribers however, it is necessary to add, that although so interest is sequired under ordinary success in business upon their subscriptions, yet provision must be made otherwise, as usual in matual companies, to meet all losses and legal demands fairly and promptly by equal assessments; and in case it should ever be found, under any unusual event, that the amount of earned and terminated premiums on head should be assufficient to meet their losses, such deficiency must be made good by assessments is praportion as each stockholdur's interest bears to the amount of such deficiency. It should be remarked further, that there is little probability of the occurrence of such an event, as the premiums of every insarance company, where it is conducted prudently, and where the officers give their business constant attention, will most generally meet not only all their losses, but afford a profit of frem 6 to 12 per cent an unally, in addition to the interest on their capitals, which in other companies go (210 common stock instead of being paid directly to the subscribers. The time allowed under the amendment to the charter of this company for completing the subscriptions to their capital, will expire be limitation on the 5th day of May sext—in the mean while their subscription books will continue open until the full amount skall have been duly subscribed.
